Golf Talk with Paula Olsen, PGA

The cornerstone to success in any sport is good FUNdamentals! If you take the time to really understand and learn the fundamentals in golf, you will develop a swing that will hold up under any kind of pressure. The most important fundamental in golf is a good grip. If your hands are not placed correctly on the club, you have no chance to hit the ball where you want it to go.

Notice in the first illustration regardless of whether you are using the 10-finger, overlapping or interlocking grip, there are no gaps between the fingers of either hand. This is a very common flaw with junior golfers: big gaps between the hands. We want our hands to work together as one unit. The second illustration demonstrates how important it is for us to get the heel pad of our target hand on top of the grip as we keep the back of the target hand facing the target. This helps create control and leverage. The third illustration shows the proper position of the hands on the club: palm to palm, or if you prefer, the back of the target hand points to the target and the palm of the trailing hand points to the target. This neutral position allows our hands to rotate properly through impact. The last illustration demonstrates the most common improper position of the hands on the club. The trailing hand is rotated under the shaft and the palm is actually facing towards the sky. Remember, hold the club - do not grip it. If you can master this FUNdamental you will be well on your way to becoming a great golfer!
